Raise a smile is a toy-building workshop that is similar to a real production line, with teams having to first cut out components from a wooden sheet then sand off rough edges before gluing, painting and assembling their toys.

Success is determined by quality not quantity so the teams must select roles carefully and devise a manufacturing process that is both efficient and effectively produces finished toys good enough to give as gifts.

The afternoon will finish with a pint-sized celebration as, unbeknown to the teams, we will bring a small number of the children we support, with their siblings to receive some of the toys (if available)- proving that a day of creating the toys really does make a difference and raise a much-needed smile.

The local paper can be invited along to get some photos and quotes from the teams about their challenge and the impact to both the business and the charity.
